A ton of civet, good apothecary

Travis is redolent with all the unison prejudices of the past, and, without civet, not to be telerated in the enlightened nineteenth century! The fact is he is an ass, and one of the most stapid kind. He would make all mankind bow at his altar, and go singing the name of the Savior along every street and thoroughfare in the land. He would abolish secial gallierings suless they could be induced by thumb serees and

They are all expressed in good English—that is to say, in good English according to the standard of the spasmodical school of writers—and there is in the columns variety that pleases, leading the reader on from the first to the last page, offering at each step something that is unique if not new, and nothing that is flabby or

The prospectus is brief, and as follows: "This journal is devoted to the free discussion of all living questions in church, state, society, literature, art and moral reform."

And that Mr. Tilton means what he says, is proven by the contents of the first number, in which he admits extracts defending straight-jacket Christfinity, and in another column under his own signature declares that Christ was not a good Christian, and that David ras a revengeful old wretch.

But we have said more than we in tended to, and must leave Tilton and his Age for the present.

Swift Change from Poverty to and thoroughfare in the land. He would abolish seem gatherings nuless they could be induced by thumb serews and ather devices of torture to have "Jeans there." Because, for sooth, public meetings, even though caffled to the punctings, even though caffled to the hungry and clothing to the naked—might refuse or neglect to say: "And all fair in the name of Jesus!" Travis would wipe them out, saying "there is no Jeans there."

We do not propose to anter upon a defense of Odd Fellowship, and it needs no defense of Odd Fellowship, and it needs no defense from patents like that of Travis. The say that Christiaus, Infeder, Jeans and Pagans may not units to dispense charity and caltivate friends of the name of the same and prejudices, is to assert a weak pro-

We know them now, and their gentle looks and professions of leyslty will not answer. They are the instigation of border ruffinnisms, rebels and Ka Klar. Blanchard mays so, and Blanchard ought to know.

But while Blunchard has Masoary alarmingly on his weak brain, the mind of the Rev. Joseph Travis is all torn into shreets by harred of Odd Pallowship; and what is a dreadful feature of the matter is the fact that he has permitted his hatred to run into rhyme.
